Closing Remarks

R.J.		Linden

There is no time for me to comment on all the papers and I am really not competent to come up with a summary of the proceedings which would also bring together all the answers with one unifying thought...

However, I would like to make one general comment, about something which I would say is one of my particular prejudices; that is, on the care that we all should take in relating one variable to another and the horror we should have of concomitant variation. It is not sufficient to show a mathematical correlation; a reasonable biological connection should first be accepted. The collection of numbers should not be our major occupation.

There is, lastly, another, probably more important thing to say, and that is to thank everybody who has looked after us so well and also the management of this fine institution, Sandoz, and indeed the European Society of Cardiology for inviting us here.

H. A.Snellen

Obviously my task of closing this conference has been made very much easier by Dr. Linden's valuable remarks.

Now, I think, the only task left is to thank all the speakers who have contributed to the success of this meeting, as well as the chairmen and moderators of the respective sessions.
