Editorial Note

Pediatric Neurosurgery begins this year, the twentieth since its founding in 1985, with an evolving role as one of the many voices in support of pediatric neurosurgical research and practice. In parallel, the challenges to the community of pediatric neurosurgeons throughout the world are evolving both in number and complexity. Our societies and journals continue to provide an invaluable tapestry of communication that moves us forward in addressing these challenges. We acknowledge and thank the many who have contributed to the weaving of this tapestry through the success of Pediatric Neurosurgery. As we look to the upcoming issues of the journal, we hope that our new on-line submission process (resulting in significant decreases in both review and publication time), coupled with an ongoing effort to involve more neurosurgeons from around the globe in activities related to the journal, will keep the voice of Pediatric Neurosurgery vital and engaged with our community.

David M. Frim, Chicago, Ill.